The Australian-based principal purchases from a range of international producers and supplies the Australian market and the New Zealand business.

The vendor anticipates that the owner of the New Zealand business would be required to allocate an average of about an hours administration input per week. The business has operated in New Zealand and Australia for about forty years in the gifts and cards sector of variety store merchandise. Growth is significant and there is potential for more. Consequently, the owner has decided that the New Zealand operation should become independently owned. The proceeds of the sale will be applied to expansion of inventory to benefit the business in both markets. Included in the sale are exclusive rights to sourced products, use of the trading name and introductions to the established sales agents team.

There are established sales agents based in various New Zealand locations to service retail customers in their territories.

The business may draw stock direct from Australian principal or hold inventory or a combination of both.

Business development is by way of personal representation by the sales agents and orders are processed through a field sales application.
